Teacher Answer Key & Notes

Keep this page for yourself – not for students

Country Hunt: Give each student one country card (repeat cards for larger classes). Students mingle asking "Where are you from?" until they find their "country twin," or collect signatures from classmates with different countries on the back of their card.

"Fine" card: This is the odd one out – the answer is "I'm fine, thank you." Esta es la respuesta típica y educada en inglés. Cuando alguien pregunta "How are you?", esta es la forma más común y cortés de responder – y después, ¡la persona debe preguntar de vuelta: "How are you?"!

Ecuador Nature Cards: Use for the sorting game (digital version also available). Students say the full sentence out loud – "Ecuador has llamas" / "Ecuador doesn't have kangaroos" – before placing the card in a pile. Correct the "doesn't have" items gently; several are common misconceptions worth discussing (e.g., camels, kangaroos, polar bears are not found in Ecuador).

New Friend Passport: Students fill in their own info first, then interview 2–3 classmates for the "New Friends I Met" table, using all three question sets from the day in one natural conversation. Close by having a few volunteers introduce a friend to the class: "This is _____. She is from _____. Ecuador has _____."

Plants & Fruits / Foods & Dishes Cards: Use for "What is this?" practice – hold up a card, students answer "This is a/an _____." Articles are already built into each answer, so there's no need to explain the a/an rule; just model the full sentence. A few dish names (ceviche, tigrillo, encebollado, fritada, loco de papa, hornado) are said without an article, the way English speakers say "This is sushi" or "This is pizza" – that's intentional and doesn't need to be taught either.
