📌 Nota cultural para los estudiantes

Cuando alguien te pregunta "How are you?" en inglés, la respuesta más común — casi automática — es "I'm fine, thank you" ("Estoy bien, gracias"), incluso si la persona no se siente realmente bien. No es que estén mintiendo: esta pregunta funciona muchas veces como un saludo social, no como una invitación a contar en detalle cómo uno se siente de verdad.

Es buena idea usar esta respuesta estándar con desconocidos, en el trabajo, en una tienda, o en cualquier conversación breve y cotidiana. Si hablas con alguien de mucha confianza — familia o amigos cercanos — y de verdad quieres compartir cómo te sientes, puedes responder con más detalle ("Estoy un poco cansado hoy"). Aun así, muchos angloparlantes dirán "fine" primero, casi por costumbre, antes de explicar más.

Teacher Answer Key & Notes

Keep this page for yourself – not for students

Country Hunt: Give each student one country card (repeat cards for larger classes). Students mingle asking "Where are you from?" until they find their "country twin," or collect signatures from classmates with different countries on the back of their card.

"Fine" card: This is the odd one out – the answer is "I'm fine, thank you." Esta es la respuesta típica y educada en inglés. Cuando alguien pregunta "How are you?", esta es la forma más común y cortés de responder – y después, ¡la persona debe preguntar de vuelta: "How are you?"!

Ecuador Nature Cards: Use for the sorting game (digital version also available). Students say the full sentence out loud – "Ecuador has llamas" / "Ecuador doesn't have kangaroos" – before placing the card in a pile. Correct the "doesn't have" items gently; several are common misconceptions worth discussing (e.g., camels, kangaroos, polar bears are not found in Ecuador).

New Friend Passport: Students fill in their own info first, then interview 2–3 classmates for the "New Friends I Met" table, using all three question sets from the day in one natural conversation. Close by having a few volunteers introduce a friend to the class: "This is _____. She is from _____. Ecuador has _____."

Plants & Fruits / Foods & Dishes Cards: Use for "What is this?" practice – hold up a card, students answer "This is a/an _____." Articles are already built into each answer, so there's no need to explain the a/an rule; just model the full sentence. A few dish names (ceviche, tigrillo, encebollado, fritada, loco de papa, hornado) are said without an article, the way English speakers say "This is sushi" or "This is pizza" – that's intentional and doesn't need to be taught either.

Age Cards: Use for "How old are you?" practice – hold up a card, students answer "I am _____ years old." A digital version with audio is also available.

Name Cards (listening activity): These pair with the digital "What's Your Name?" listening game, where students hear a two-line exchange ("What's your name?" / "My name is _____.") in two different pitches and pick the name they heard from written choices. For a physical version: say a name aloud yourself (or play the digital audio on a speaker), and have students race to find and hold up the matching card. Each name is tied to one of the countries from the Country Cards – a nice moment to connect "María is from Ecuador" back to the Country Hunt.
